The Paternal Ancestry

of Joseph, Jack, and Jude Smith

First Edition

by Joseph Smith

I assembled this first edition from family accounts, public records, obituaries, directories, parish compilations, and local histories. Some names, dates, and relationships may be incorrect. I welcome corrections, photographs, records, and further collaboration.

The Smith and Frame Families

Paul Michael Smith (born July 31, 1966). My father, Paul, is the present generation in this family line. His sons are Joseph Benjamin Smith, John “Jack” Walters Smith, and Jude Thomas Smith. Jack is a professional actor working under the screen name JW Burkhart. Paul is the son of James “Jim” Smith and Joan Mary Bagby. Through Jim, the line continues to Charles Winfred Smith Sr. and Myrtle Frame. Through Joan, it divides into the Bagby and Burkart families traced in the following sections. The family we know most directly is centered on Chattanooga and the communities around Hamilton County.¹

James “Jim” Smith. Jim and his family lived in the Chattanooga area. He was the father of Charles, Philip, Jamey, Nancy, and Paul. Family accounts name his parents as Charles Winfred Smith Sr. and Myrtle Frame. The Smith paper trail currently stops with them.²

Charles Winfred Smith Sr. and Myrtle Frame Smith (dates not yet established). Their household belongs to the twentieth-century South, but the records needed to identify their birthplaces, occupations, and parents have not yet been found. Myrtle’s surname points toward an older Frame family in the Appalachian interior. The generations below are possible ancestors, but the link from Myrtle to Hiram Frame has not yet been proved.³

Hiram Frame (about 1809-1877) and Sarah Green Frame (dates not yet established). Hiram lived in Braxton County, in what became West Virginia. Farms and small settlements were spread among steep ridges, narrow valleys, and the branches of the Elk River. He is the first named candidate above Myrtle, although the generations between them remain unknown.⁴

James Frame (1776-1840) and Rebecca Boggs Frame (dates not yet established). James was born in Augusta County, Virginia, and died in Nicholas County. Their marriage in 1801 placed them in a region where county lines changed as families moved west through the Virginia uplands.⁵

David D. Frame (1745-1810) and Elizabeth Hanna Botkin Frame (born 1747; death year not yet established). Elizabeth was born in Ireland and came to Pennsylvania as a child. In 1801 the family moved to Big Birch River at Powell's Creek, then a thinly settled frontier of farms, timber, and difficult overland travel.⁶

John Frame (1723-1797) and Margaret Hogshead Frame (dates not yet established). John was born in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, married in Augusta County, Virginia, and died in Greenbrier County. His life follows the southwesterly road used by many Ulster-Scots families: from Pennsylvania into the Shenandoah Valley and then beyond the Alleghenies.⁷

The Bagby and Munn Families

Joan Mary Bagby Meagher (1937-2024). Joan was born on Look-out Mountain, Georgia, seven minutes after her identical twin, Anne. She graduated from Notre Dame High School in Chattanooga in 1955 and earned an education degree from the University of Chattanooga in 1959. She taught, later worked for BellSouth, and spent her final years in The Villages, Florida.⁸

Earl Myers Bagby (1908-1967) and Marjorie Mary Burkart Bagby (1912-2000). Joan's parents joined two Ohio River families. Earl was born in Portsmouth, Ohio, across the river from Kentucky. Marjorie was born in Campbell County, Kentucky, in the Newport orbit. They later made their life in the Chattanooga area, where Earl died in 1967 and Marjorie lived until 2000.⁹

Albert Myers Bagby (1881-1954) and Emma - recorded as Watkins (1885-1965) or Gatewood (1882-1971). Albert was born in Lewis County, Kentucky. Family compilations place him in Chattanooga as an optician by 1918. His skilled urban trade marked a change from the farms, county roads, and river work of the older Bagby generations. Emma's surname and dates remain unresolved because the available profiles identify two different women.¹⁰

Willis Scott Bagby (1839-1920) and Laura Amanda Munn Bagby (1850-1930). Willis was born near St. Paul in Lewis County and lost both parents when he was nine. During the Civil War he served in a Confederate mounted unit even though Lewis County leaned toward the Union. He later spent years as Vanceburg's wharfmaster, worked in river transportation, and became a merchant. Laura outlived him by nearly ten years.¹¹

Dr. David Crawford Munn (1818-1867) and Amanda Reed Munn (1827-1901). The available family records identify them as Laura's parents. David was a physician. Their household belonged to the same northeastern Kentucky world of small towns and river crossings. A separate profile for Laura's brother David Claude Munn supports the same family group.¹²

Willis Bagby (about 1801-1849) and Mary "Polly" Thompson Bagby (1802-1849). They farmed near Quincy in Lewis County. Willis served as a road overseer on the route toward Portsmouth and acted as guardian for children in the extended family. He died on 7 May 1849; Polly died nine weeks later, on 10 July. Their five children were left without either parent. Both were buried in the Bagby family cemetery between Quincy and St. Paul.¹³

Robert Bagby (about 1782-1827) and Frances “Fanny” Bagby (surname and dates not yet established). Robert lived in the early Quincy neighborhood, served as a justice of the peace, and placed a schoolhouse on his farm. His 1827 will named Fanny and six children by name, including Willis; the family compilation adds two daughters. Farms, ferries, roads, and the Ohio River tied this household to nearby Kentucky and Ohio communities.¹⁴

William Bagby (1750-1806) and Drusilla Simms Bagby (dates not yet established). William lived in Cumberland County, Virginia. His will, proved in 1806, named a son Robert among thirteen children, making him the probable father of the Robert who later settled in Kentucky. William and Drusilla married in Hanover County in 1770, when tobacco farms and river routes shaped much of inland Virginia life. The generation above William remains disputed.¹⁵

The Burkart and Burgert Families

Joan Mary Bagby Meagher (1937-2024). Joan's mother was Marjorie Mary Burkart. From her, the family reaches through Newport, Kentucky, and Ottersweier, Baden, to Martin Burgert at the edge of the surviving seventeenth-century records.¹⁶

Marjorie Mary Burkart Bagby (1912-2000) and Earl Myers Bagby (1908-1967). Marjorie was born in Campbell County, Kentucky, while the Burkarts still lived near Newport. Her family moved south during her childhood and was in Chattanooga by the 1920 census. Her marriage to Earl joined the Burkart and Bagby branches in Tennessee.¹⁷

Alphonse Charles Burkart (1888-1924) and Alma Schehl Burkart (1887-1981). Alphonse grew up in the Newport and Fort Thomas area, amid German churches, neighborhood shops, and the industrial traffic of the Cincinnati riverfront. He and Alma moved their family to Chattanooga by 1920. By 1924 the Chattanooga directory identified A. C. Burkart as president of Burkart-Schier Chemical Company; the surviving evidence strongly identifies that president as Alphonse. He died there that year, when Marjorie was twelve.¹⁸

Louis J. Burkart (1861-1930) and Ernestina Altenburg Burkart (1861-1926). Louis was born in Newport. In 1880-81 he lived with his family at 29 Walnut Street, where the directory also listed his father August and his brother Charles. The household belonged to the first American-born generation of a family rooted in Newport's German and industrial neighborhoods.¹⁹

August M. Burkart (1836-1907) and Barbara Stephany Burkart (1838-1905). August was born in Ottersweier on 24 September 1836 and came to Kentucky as a teenager. He married Barbara in Newport in 1858 and worked as a rolling-mill catcher. Baptisms of their children at Corpus Christi in 1866 and 1873 place the family in Newport's German Catholic parish network.²⁰

Ignaz Burgert, later Burkart (1798-1872), and Theresia Zeller Burkart (1802-1874). Ignaz was a joiner in Ottersweier; Theresia grew up in an innkeeper's large household in nearby Achern. They married in 1835. Seven children were born during the next decade, but only August and Bertha survived infancy. The Ottersweier family book places their Atlantic crossing about 1854. The first American record found so far is Newport's 1861 directory, which lists Ignaz as a cabinetmaker and August as a laborer on Chestnut Street.²¹

Franz Fidelis Burgert (1763-1831) and Maria Anna Moser Burgert (1775-1830). Franz Fidelis worked as a cooper, making and repairing the wooden vessels needed for wine, agriculture, and storage. Maria Anna came from a milling family at Haft. During their lives Ottersweier passed from Baden-Baden to Austrian rule and then into the enlarged state of Baden. The village economy still rested on fields, vines, woodland, mills, and skilled household trades.²²

Franz Josef Burgert (1730-1765) and Anna Maria Rimmele Burgert (1728-1765). Franz Josef was also a cooper. Anna Maria was the daughter of village schoolteacher Josef Anton Rimmele. They died seven days apart in May 1765, leaving their young son Franz Fidelis without either parent before he was two. The compilation records no cause.²³

Josef Burgert (died 1730) and Maria Barbara Graf Burgert (1710-1765). Josef, a cooper, married Maria Barbara on 16 November 1728 and was buried sixteen months later. Maria Barbara survived him by thirty-five years and died in 1765, the same year as their son Franz Josef and his wife. The Graf family lived around Haft's vineyards.²⁴

Johannes Christopherus Burgert (1674-1728). Born at Haft, he was Josef's father. Ottersweier's parish books preserve the baptisms, marriages, and burials that connect his household to the next generation.²⁵

Johannes Burgert (1648-1714) and Susanne Gutmann Burgert (1648-1720). They married in 1673, a generation after the worst destruction of the Thirty Years' War. Susanne came from Neusatz-Waldsteg. Her father, Matthias Gutmann, was a joiner; Ignaz practiced the same craft seven generations later. Their families lived among recovering farms, orchards, vineyards, woodland, and craft households on the Baden plain below the Black Forest.²⁶

Martin Burgert (died 1672) and Ottilia (dates not yet established). Martin and Ottilia are the earliest probable couple in the direct Burgert line. They lived at Haft when Ottersweier's parish books were new; the registers begin in 1641, after raids had burned farms and displaced families in 1634 and 1637. Martin's burial was recorded on 12 July 1672. Earlier Burgert households appear nearby, but none has yet been proved as his parents.²⁷

Earl Myers Bagby (1908-1967). At seventeen or eighteen, Earl had a federally listed amateur station in the family's Chattanooga home. The call sign and street address turn his youth into something more specific than a census entry: he was experimenting with radio during the first decade of commercial broadcasting.²⁸

Willis Scott Bagby (1839-1920). The directory is strong evidence for the family’s merchant life across the river from Kentucky. A second record is still needed to prove that its “Willis Bagby” is Willis Scott rather than another man of the same name.²⁹

Catherine Bagby McAllister (dates not yet established). The current Bagby reconstruction identifies Catherine as Willis Scott Bagby's sister. After her husband, Captain John McAllister, died in 1872, she controlled the Fannie Dugan. In 1876 she combined her steamboat interest with the Bay brothers' packet company. The boat itself, its Portsmouth-Huntington route, and the widow's ownership are independently documented; Catherine's exact place in this family still rests on compiled genealogy.³⁰

Alphonse Charles Burkart (1888-1924). The 1924 Chattanooga directory identifies A. C. Burkart as president of Burkart-Schier. A later local account reported that William A. Bentel and “the late A. C. Burkhart” founded a chemical business on Chestnut Street in 1922. Charles A. Schier joined about eighteen months later, and the company took the Burkart-Schier name.³²

The directory also indexes Alphonse C. Burkart in Chattanooga, and he died there in 1924, strongly identifying A. C. as Alphonse. Earl Bagby was only fourteen in 1922. Because the original directory page and Alphonse's 1933 biography remain uninspected, the identification is strong rather than conclusive.³³

By 1966 it also made textile auxiliaries and latex backing for the carpet industry. General Aniline & Film acquired the business in 1967, ending its independent run but carrying its work into a larger chemical corporation.³⁴

Louis J. Burkart Sr. (1861-1930), Louis J. Burkart Jr. (about 1885-1950), and Edwin A. Burkart (dates not yet established). Louis Sr. is the direct ancestor; Louis Jr. was Alphonse's younger brother and Marjorie's uncle. By 1914 the directory identified Louis Jr. as a photographer at Burkart's. In 1918 it named Louis Sr., Louis Jr., and Edwin as partners in the photographic company. The cards carry the family studio name, but cannot be assigned securely to either Louis alone.³⁵

29 Walnut Street

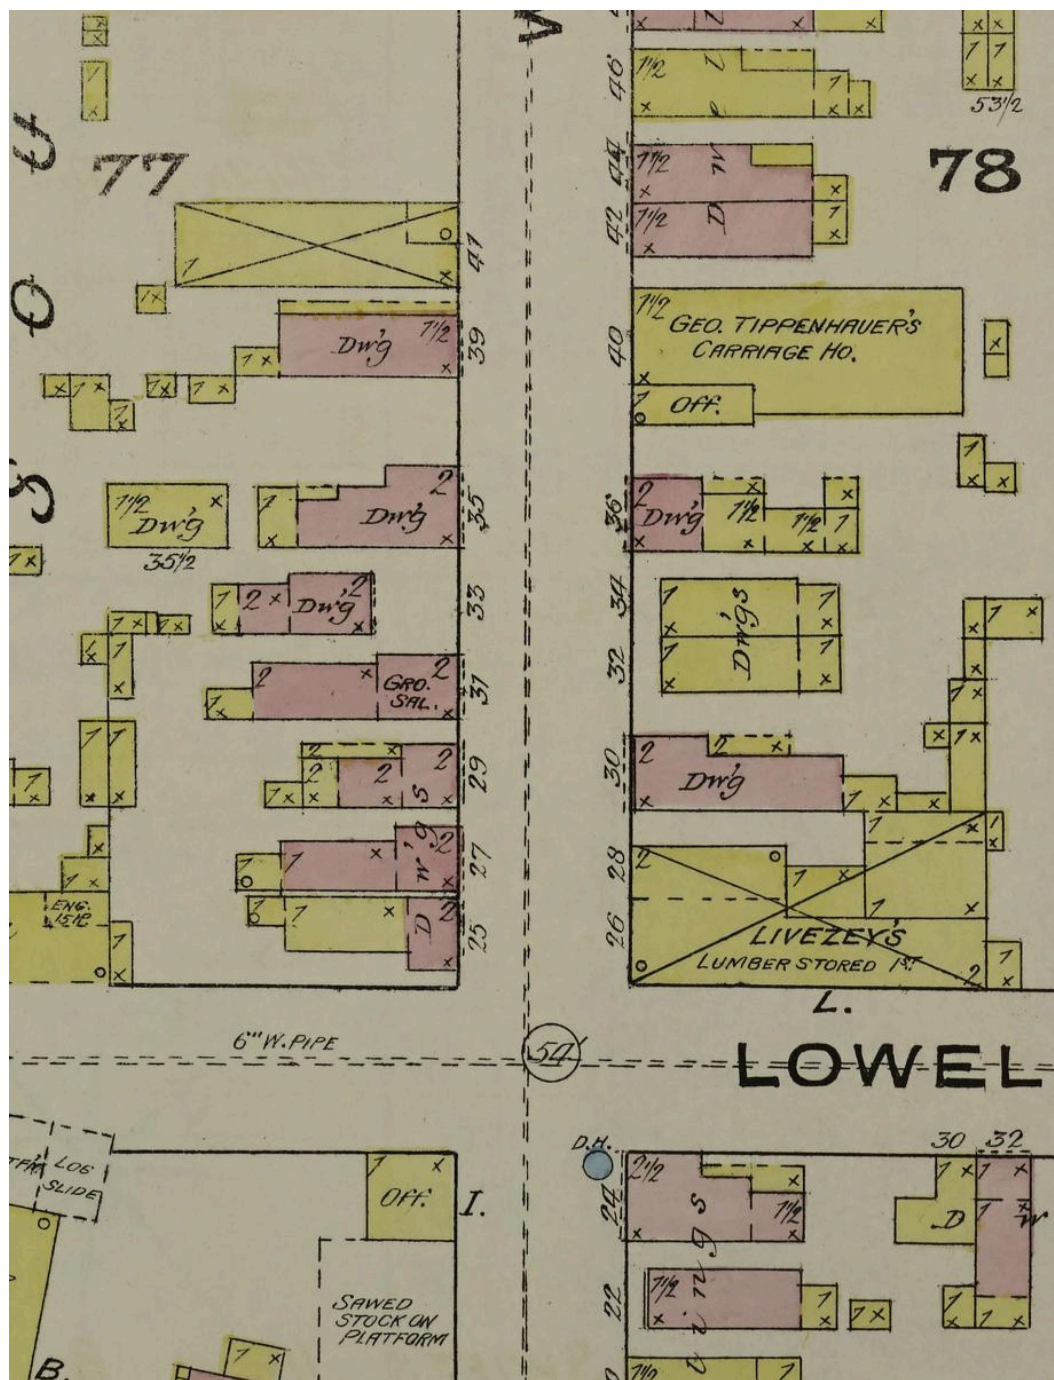

Figure 11: The 1886 Sanborn map marks house number 29 on the west side of Walnut Street, just north of Lowell. The 1880-81 directory placed August, Charles, and Louis Burkart at that address. The map records the building, not its occupants. Library of Congress, Geography and Map Division, Sanborn Maps Collection; public domain. Open sheet 10.

A Newport Rolling Mill

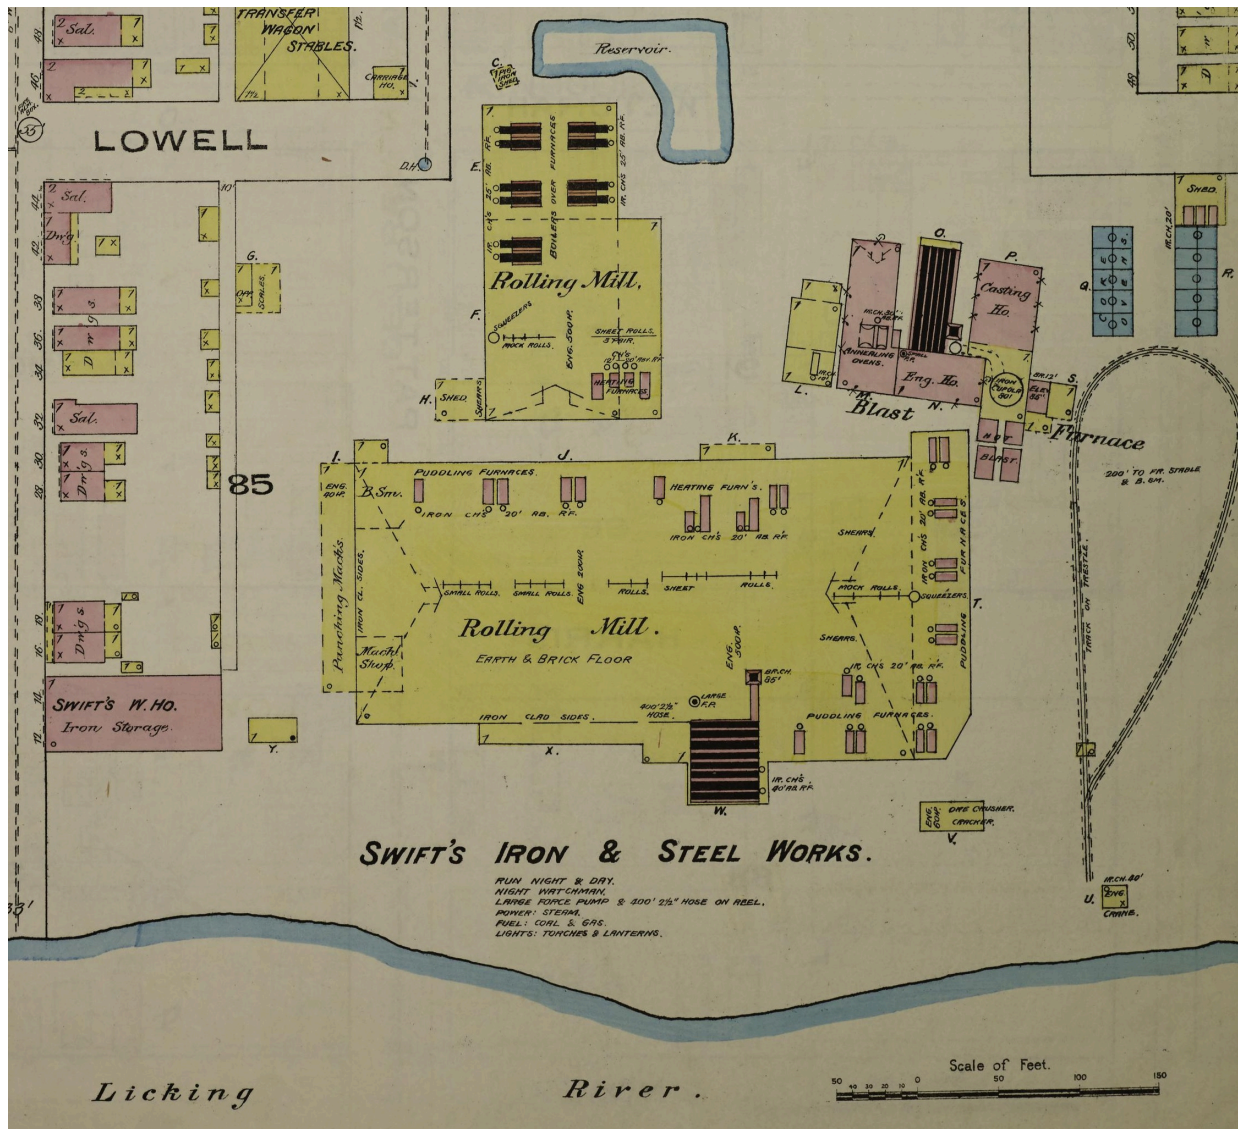

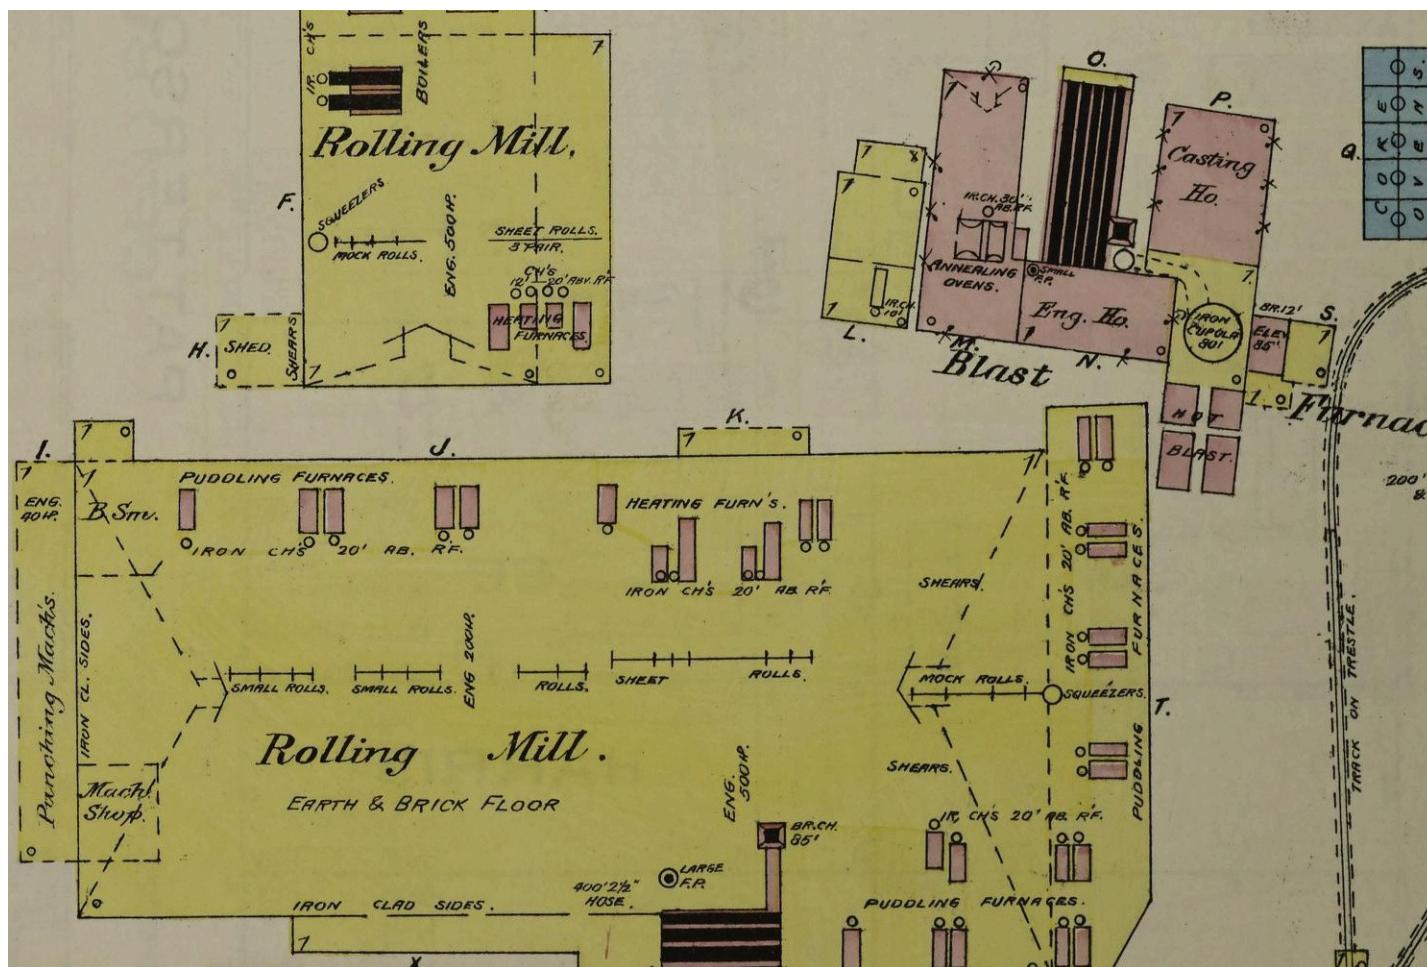

Figure 12: Swift's Iron & Steel Works beside the Licking River in 1886. The sheet labels rolling mills, puddling furnaces, heating furnaces, rolls, shears, boilers, and a blast furnace. August Burkart worked as a rolling-mill catcher, although no surviving record yet identifies this as his employer. Library of Congress, Geography and Map Division, Sanborn Maps Collection; public domain. Open sheet 11.

The map shows the heat, machinery, and riverfront scale behind the brief occupation printed beside August's name. A catcher handled hot iron as it came through the rolls.

The Rolling Mill Floor

Enlarged detail from Swift's Iron & Steel Works in 1886, labeling rolls, squeezers, shears, heating and puddling furnaces, boilers, and a blast furnace. August Burkart was a catcher, but no surviving record identifies his employer. Library of Congress, Geography and Map Division; public domain. Open sheet 11.

August M. Burkart

Newport and Cincinnati, about 1866

Cincinnati, Covington, and Newport about 1866, five years after August and Ignaz first appear in the Newport directory. Newport in 1856

AND BUSINESS DIRECTORY

Newport, and the villages of Jamestown and Brooklyn, occupying about 2,000 acres, are rapidly becoming united as one town, and contain many elegant mansions and cottages of wealthy and retired citizens.

Newport contains several churches, extensive rolling mills, iron foundries, steam mills, and other manufacturing establishments. This town is rapidly increasing in population and wealth. Population about 10,000.

At the mouth of the Licking is an old United States Recruiting Station. The buildings belonging to the Station were some years since rebuilt in a neat and handsome manner. A beautiful wire suspension bridge across the Licking, connects Newport with Covington.

Figure 15: An 1856 city guide described Newport as a manufacturing town with rolling mills, iron foundries, churches, and about ten thousand residents. Cincinnati and Hamilton County Public Library, public-domain scan.

Ignaz Burkart (1798-1872) and August M. Burkart (1836-1907). They arrived in a compact river city tied closely to Cincinnati. Workshops, mills, foundries, churches, and crowded residential streets shaped the Newport they knew.

Across the Atlantic, about 1854

The family book places Ignaz, Theresia, August, and Bertha Burgert on the Atlantic about 1854, but no ship, port, route, or exact date has been proved. The parents were in their fifties and the two surviving children were teenagers.

If they took the common, cheaper sailing-ship passage, they likely slept in shared bunks below deck and lived for weeks with plain food, little privacy, seasickness, damp, and rough weather. Two German letters show what the same year could demand. Dorothea Schuhmacher sailed from Le Havre to New York in 35 days and was sick for nearly the entire voyage. Sebastian Fritz spent 47 days at sea and recalled nausea, bad food, spoiled water, icebergs, and six deaths aboard. Neither letter describes the Burkarts; each is a period comparison.

Ignaz Burgert and Theresia Zeller

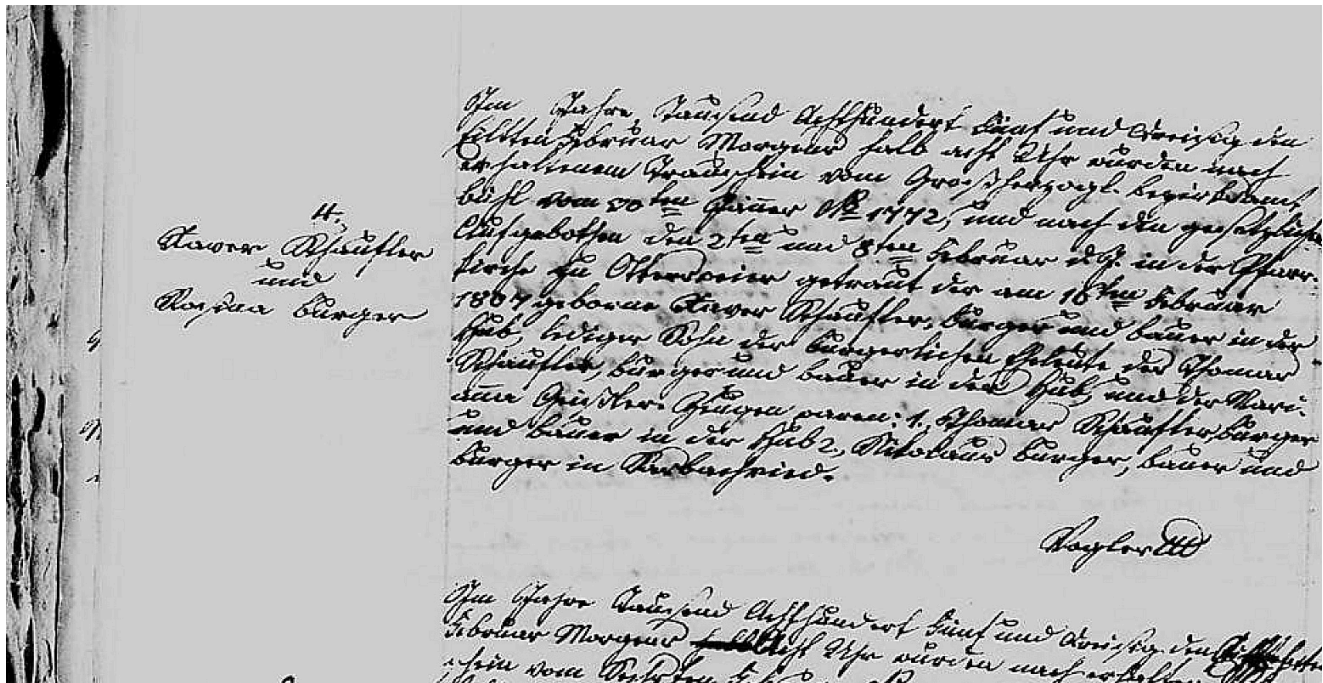

Figure 17: Marriage entry no. 4 for Ignaz Burgert and Theresia Zeller. The archival duplicate shows their names, the year 1835, and the twenty-fifth day; the family-book reconstruction supplies the month of February. Generallandesarchiv Karlsruhe, GLAK 390 Nr. 905, image 94. Open the archival image. Public Domain Mark 1.0.

Normalized reading of the left margin: 4. Ignaz Burgert und Theresia Zeller. The 4 is the running marriage-entry number, not part of either name or the date. Their names are written below it in nineteenth-century German cursive; the paragraph to the right is the numbered marriage act. The surname is normalized as Zeller. August's 1836 baptism and the Ottersweier family book independently support the reading. The displayed crop does not make the month legible.

Ottersweier and Haft

St. Johannes, Ottersweier

Bagby / Bagbie: Yorkshire

Robert Morden's map of the North Riding of Yorkshire, first published in 1695, marks Bagby just east of Thirsk. The red ring identifies the village. Bagby is the likely place-name source of the English surname; no record connects the known family line to Yorkshire. Public domain. Open the source map.

The Frame Name in Lanarkshire

Lanarkshire in John Marius Wilson's Imperial Gazetteer of Scotland, about 1854. The map labels the town "Strathavon"; the red ring marks it. Modern Strathaven was one of the Lanarkshire weaving towns associated with the Frame surname. The candidate American line has no proved British birthplace. Public domain. Open the source map.

Johannes Moser at Offenburg

Johannes Moser (died 20 March 1645). Maria Koerfer's Ottersweier family book reports that this miller was shot by French soldiers in a field at Offenburg during the Thirty Years' War. It lists his wife Anna, whose surname is unknown, as dying in 1646. The original parish image has not yet been checked.³⁶

Figure 20: Offenburg in an early edition of Sebastian Münster's Cosmographia, published between 1544 and 1628. This idealized view predates Johannes Moser's reported death there in 1645. Sebastian Münster; public domain. Open the image record.

Georg Moser (1645-1709). Georg was baptized one month after Johannes's reported death and later worked at the Münchmühle. The family-book reconstruction reaches Johannes twice: through Ignaz's mother, Maria Anna Moser, and through Ignaz's paternal grandmother, Anna Maria Rimmele. Johannes is therefore Ignaz's third-great-grandfather twice, not an ancestor in the Burgert surname chain.³⁷

What the Evidence Shows

Proved with contemporary register images. The official 1835 marriage-register duplicate names Ignaz Burgert and Theresia Zeller. Their son's 1836 baptismal duplicate names the same parents and records him as August Burkard. Newport directories then place Ignaz and August together while the printed surname changes from Burkhardt to Burkart.

Supported by compiled research. The older Burgert and Moser generations come from Maria Koerfer's parish-based family book. It records the Johannes Moser shooting, the older occupations, the 1765 deaths, and the two ancestral paths back to Johannes. I have not yet checked each claim against the underlying parish images.

Still open. The Smith-Frame connection above Myrtle Frame remains a working line. The candidate John and Margaret Frame pair also needs resolution against a 1750 Augusta County reference to a Margaret Frame described as a widow. Emma's surname and Fanny Bagby's birth surname are unresolved. The 1872 Portsmouth directory names Robert and Willis Bagby together without stating their relationship. Catherine Bagby McAllister's relationship to Willis Scott rests on compiled family research. The identity of Alphonse Charles Burkart as the A. C. Burkhart named in the 1922 company account is strongly supported by the 1924 directory index, but the directory scan, his 1933 biography, and the corporate charter still need direct inspection.³⁸

Corrections and additions. I welcome identified photographs, record images, full citations, and better family accounts. I have kept the uncertain parts visible so this edition can improve without turning a promising lead into a fact.
